Historical/Architectural

In the 1880's, Elgin experienced a spurt of growth-businesses in the downtown area increased, the watch factory ticked steadily along, and the population expanded. Workers needed places to live and Elgin's north end, north of Kimball Street and west of the Dundee Road, was a perfect area for expansion. Residential development had started at Kimball Street and gradually moved northward. Kimball was the unofficial dividing line between the retail and residential areas. North Division Street (now Jefferson Avenue) was the north city limit while its eastern limit was just east of Logan Avenue. Geographical boundaries fell away as former farms became annexed to the city and were sold off in pieces as residential lots.

Merritt L. Joslyn was the brother of Col. Edward Joslyn of Elgin, both coming from a large family of Joslyns headed by Reverend A. Joslyn who died in 1868. Merritt lived in Woodstock, Illinois and enjoyed a career in local and national politics. Around 1880, Merritt Joslyn acquired a large, rectangular piece of property within the blocks bounded by Spring and Lovell Streets, Prospect Boulevard, and Jefferson Avenue, naming it "M.L. Joslyn's Addition." In 1891, several lots within the Addition were vacated to allow Center Street to be cut through from Jefferson to Lovell.

In 1897, only eight houses were within M. L. Joslyn's Addition and faced either Jefferson or Prospect. Although Center Street was open, no houses were built upon it until the early 1900's when Sam Peterson's home was built at 619 Center.

Charles Rippberger was a long time real estate dealer in Elgin and Peterson was married to his daughter, Clara. A small piece of Joslyn's Addition was subdivided by Rippberger on the east side of Center to allow for the wedding gift house to be built. Sam Peterson operated his father-in-law's real estate business along with Rippberger's son, Walter, until 1925. On Christmas Eve 1925, the Rippberger Company crashed and burned in a scandal that sent Walter to prison for 6 years.

Construction of other houses quickly followed on Center Street's east side while its west side remained vacant. Lot 15, on the west side of Center, was carved up into numerous pieces and these pieces owned by numerous individuals. Out of that dazzling array of land parcels and owners, a rectangular parcel, 50 feet wide and 145 1/2 feet deep, was sold to Jessie Montgomery in 1905. Jessie Montgomery was married to George Montgomery who worked for the Illinois Watch Case Company on Dundee Avenue.

In 1890, a group of Elgin citizens formed the Elgin Improvement Company in an effort to draw businesses to Elgin. Some of the those that came were the Ludlow Shoe Factory and the Eppenstein brothers company which became the Illinois Watch Case Company.

IWC Co. was started by the Eppenstein brothers and made cases that were sold to the watch factory, but was not part of the Watch Factory itself. Cases were solid gold, gold filled, or gold plated; some were silver or silver plated. Decoration on the cases was done by hand or by machine. IWC Co. also made cases for lighters and ladies' vanity cases—the "Elgin American" brand. Mr. Montgomery came to Elgin with the company and became its superintendent, retiring in 1927. Montgomery was also a top notch gardener, making his home at 632 Center Street a showplace. In September 1909, George and Jessie Montgomery executed a Trust Deed for $2,500, likely to build their home.

The 1909-10 Elgin City Directory indicates the Montgomery's living at 565 Center Street, their home for a number of years; the 1911-12 directory lists them at 632 Center Street. The 1913 Sanborn Map shows a one story plastered dwelling at 632 Center.

Later, small pieces of an adjoining Subdivision and Addition were added to the aforesaid parcel to make the legal description one address compromised of three parcels.

George Montgomery died in 1945. Inventory of Jessie Montgomery's estate in mid January 1960 included "house and lot at 632 Center Street." Several weeks later, the property was sold to Elmer Steinmann who kept the house until 2004. The house was then sold to Dennis Roxworthy, well known and prolific house restorationist in Elgin.

Architectural

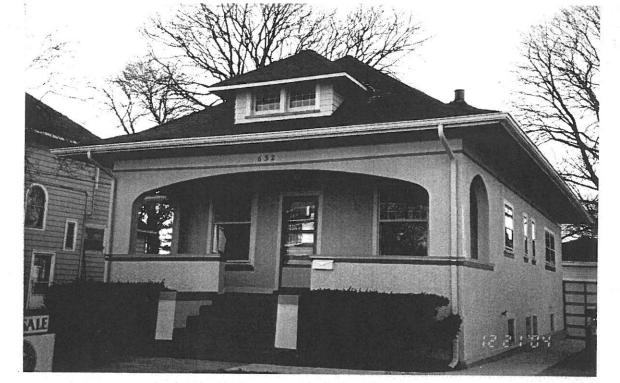

Historic Resources in the Northeast Neighborhood: A Summary and Inventory lists 632 Center Street as a Craftsman Bungalow and contributing to the historical significance of the area. The Lord's Park Neighborhood Historic Resources Survey states

Craftsman Bungalows were inspired by the work of the architects Greene and Greene in Pasadena, California, from 1893 to 1914. Their work was widely published in architectural and popular homemaking magazines of the day. The style was offered in plan books and soon became the most popular smaller house in the country.

Craftsman homes were popularized through architect and furniture maker Gustav Stickley's The Craftsman magazine and were at their peak from 1901 through 1916. The popularity of Prairie style bungalows overlapped and continued beyond that of Craftsman bungalows into the building boom of the 1920's. The distinguishing characteristic of the Craftsman style is open rafters in the exterior eaves.

632 Center is a 1 story, stuccoed bungalow with a hipped roof containing several hipped roof dormers. A full width front porch has arched openings. Windows are in various sizes and are used singly or in pairs. Multi-paned windows are seen in the front facade of the house, but it is not known if they are original to it. The house lacks the distinguishing open rafters of the Craftsman style, but is considered a Craftsman bungalow by way of its hipped roof and single story. An addition was made to the south facade of the house; the garage was built in 1964.

The Lithotype Engraving Company was organized in 1900 and has been doing business at North Street and North Grove Avenue for the past twenty-seven years. It is the only lithotype company in the northern part of the county and maintains a thoroughly equipped establishment for the production of high-class halftones, zinc etchings and color plates of every process. It also maintains an art department, where drawings, and layouts in pen, wash, or color are executed by artists of experience and ability. It also has a competent force of mechanical retouchers in its service at all times. It maintains a strictly up-to-date modern engraving house not surpassed in northern Illinois for any service coming within its scope.

The officers are J. A. Schmidt, president; G. E. Stahl, vice-president and secretary.

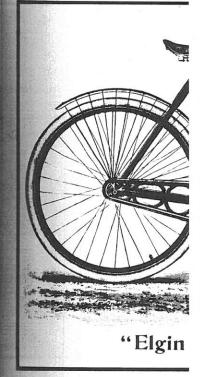

Plant of Illinois Watch Case Co., Elgin, Illinois

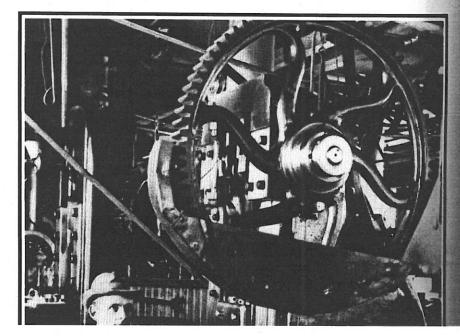

Old Elgin - a Pictorial History

The "case factory," not connected with the Elgin National Watch Co., was the city's second largest employer for more than forty years. The Illinois Watch Case Co. removed from Chicago in 1890. It was one of the industries encouraged to locate in Elgin by William Grote's efforts. The cases were of solid gold, silver, gold-filled, and silver and gold plated of all sizes. Decorative work was both hand engraved and stamped. Besides watch cases, the company manufactured lockets, novelty jewelry, cigarette lighters, and vanity cases. During World War II the firm was a major producer of chemical mortar shells. Output in the big plant on Dundee avenue, hard hit by foreign competition, ended in the early sixties.

A press with one operation cut and shaped the back of the watch case from long strips of metal. "This press is provided with dies of every description, size and shape; some with the various designs which ornament the back and front of the case," reported the Elgin Weekly Courier, July 12, 1890.

Elgia: Un Umerican Hestory by E.C. Alft

the Elgin City Railway Company was chartered in 1886. The corporation purchased Payne's franchise for a reported $41,000 in the summer of 1889. Pledging to lay nine miles of new track at once, six on the east side and three on the west side, the firm secured a new franchise from the City Council over vigorous competition from Chicagoans. To power the cars, the line acquired and expanded the Edison electric light plant and assumed responsibility for furnishing the city with light and power as well as transportation.

During consideration of an amendment to the franchise in February 1890, one alderman announced that he had been offered a bribe in connection with the type of track to be laid. The alleged offer was traced to a supplier of rails, and the Elgin City Railway was free of taint. One alderman was indicted and subsequently acquitted, but of the seven aldermen up for re-election in April 1890, four chose not to run and the other three were defeated.

On July 4, 1890—before Chicago and most other Illinois cities had them—Elgin's first electric street cars began carrying passengers between what is now Lords Park and Fountain Square. Within a year, the company was operating fifteen motor cars and six trailers over thirteen miles of track. A four-track barn built on the west side of South Grove Avenue housed the equipment. The cars all came down to the Square but did not cross it. Passengers received transfers to another car if they wished to continue their trip. Fares were five cents for adults and three cents for children under twelve.

The trolley line gave Grote and his associates an additional inducement to lure new industries. The Illinois Watch Case Company had been incorporated in 1888 as an outgrowth of a whole-sale jewelry firm in Chicago. The president, Max C. Eppenstein, agreed to move to Elgin in return for land and a building along Dundee Avenue. In return, the firm agreed to employ at least one hundred the first year, hire fifty more the second year, and an additional fifty the third year. Shortly before the plant opened, Grote, Church, and Waldron began selling lots in the Grand View subdivision across the way. Its boundaries were Cooper, Cedar, Lincoln, and Dundee avenues. Lots varied in price from $460 to $820.

The Eppenstein firm intended to change its name to the Elgin Watch Case Company. The Elgin National Watch Company, which did not case its movements and was wary of the possible confusion, quickly moved to charter a corporation with that name. Then Eppenstein countered by organizing the National Watch Case Company of Elgin. The dispute was litigated and ultimately appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court, which in 1901 ruled that "Elgin" was a geographic designation which could not be an exclusive trademark because the city existed before the arrival of the watch factory. Meanwhile, the case works prospered. Within a year of its arrival, it was employing about two hundred fifty workers and producing about nine hundred cases daily. Before the decade was over, it had doubled its plant capacity.

Early in 1891, Grote organized a pool of land owners in the far northeast side to attract the Ludlow shoe factory from Chicago. Under the aegis of the improvement association, each land owner was given shares in the pool in proportion to the value of his property. The Ludlow firm was given shares worth forty thousand dollars for a site and building. The firm would gain a twenty percent interest in the property for each consecutive year it employed three hundred fifty. The total amount of land in the pool came to nearly two hundred acres. On April 4, 1891, lots in the Riverside Park addition, carved out of this acreage, were auctioned off in the largest lot sale ever staged in Elgin. Free trolley rides were given prospective buyers to and from the sale. Many bought lots anticipating a rise in price. The area extended north of the Grand View subdivision from the west side of Cedar Avenue to the north side of what is now River Bluff Road, and east to the county line.

George W. Ludlow & Company was headed by Ludlow and his brother-in-law, George R. Keep, and it specialized in making women's shoes. The first pair was turned out in July, while the plant on the northeast corner of Dundee and Congdon avenues was still under construction. By August 1891, 370 employees were making about nine hundred pairs daily. The firm manufactured some three hundred different styles. Its office and sales rooms remained in Chicago.

In October 1891, Grote convinced H. K. Cutter and C. H. Grossette to move their shirt factory from Chicago on a promise of a factory to be constructed on the east side of North Liberty Street between Slade Avenue and Page Street. In return for the plant, a three-story brick structure, Cutter and Crossette were obligated to employ two hundred the first year and three hundred in the ensuing four years. The shirtmakers started a temporary workshop to train employees until their building was ready for occupancy in June 1892. Investors in the improvement association

G. S. Montgomery Dies At Home

George S. Montgomery, retired general superintendent of the Illinois Watch Case Co. of this city, died early today at his home, 632 Center st., following several years of failing health. He was born in Ontario, Canada, on July 23, 1858.

As an executive associate of the Eppenstein family of this city, Mr. Montgomery was one of the men responsible for the upbuilding of a major industry in this community. He first entered the Eppensteins' employ in Chicago, in the 80s, and came with the firm to Elgin when it first made this city its home some 56 years ago.

A watchmaker by trade, Mr. Montgomery subsequently became general superintendent for the Watch Case and continued in this capacity for several years, retiring in 1927.

Skilled at the art of gardening, Mr. Montgomery had devoted the late years of his life to this fascinating hobby and the gardens at his home were considered among the finest in the city.

He was a member of the First Congregational church of Eigin.

the Elgin City Railway Company was chartered in 1886. The corporation purchased Payne's franchise for a reported $41,000 in the summer of 1889. Pledging to lay nine miles of new track at once, six on the east side and three on the west side, the firm secured a new franchise from the City Council over vigorous competition from Chicagoans. To power the cars, the line acquired and expanded the Edison electric light plant and assumed responsibility for furnishing the city with light and power as well as transportation.

During consideration of an amendment to the franchise in February 1890, one alderman announced that he had been offered a bribe in connection with the type of track to be laid. The alleged offer was traced to a supplier of rails, and the Elgin City Railway was free of taint. One alderman was indicted and subsequently acquitted, but of the seven aldermen up for re-election in April 1890, four chose not to run and the other three were defeated.

On July 4, 1890—before Chicago and most other Illinois cities had them—Elgin's first electric street cars began carrying passengers between what is now Lords Park and Fountain Square. Within a year, the company was operating fifteen motor cars and six trailers over thirteen miles of track. A four-track barn built on the west side of South Grove Avenue housed the equipment. The cars all came down to the Square but did not cross it. Passengers received transfers to another car if they wished to continue their trip. Fares were five cents for adults and three cents for children under twelve.

The trolley line gave Grote and his associates an additional inducement to lure new industries. The Illinois Watch Case Company had been incorporated in 1888 as an outgrowth of a whole-sale jewelry firm in Chicago. The president, Max C. Eppenstein, agreed to move to Elgin in return for land and a building along Dundee Avenue. In return, the firm agreed to employ at least one hundred the first year, hire fifty more the second year, and an additional fifty the third year. Shortly before the plant opened, Grote, Church, and Waldron began selling lots in the Grand View subdivision across the way. Its boundaries were Cooper, Cedar, Lincoln, and Dundee avenues. Lots varied in price from $460 to $820.

The Eppenstein firm intended to change its name to the Elgin Watch Case Company. The Elgin National Watch Company, which did not case its movements and was wary of the possible confusion, quickly moved to charter a corporation with that name. Then Eppenstein countered by org Watch Case Company of Elgin. The dispute timately appealed to the U. S. Supreme (ruled that "Elgin" was a geographic designabe an exclusive trademark because the city rival of the watch factory. Meanwhile, the Within a year of its arrival, it was employin fifty workers and producing about nine hur fore the decade was over, it had doubled its p

Early in 1891, Grote organized a pool of la northeast side to attract the Ludlow shoe f Under the aegis of the improvement associawas given shares in the pool in proportion property. The Ludlow firm was given shar sand dollars for a site and building. The firm percent interest in the property for each co. ployed three hundred fifty. The total amount came to nearly two hundred acres. On Apr. Riverside Park addition, carved out of this tioned off in the largest lot sale ever staged rides were given prospective buyers to and bought lots anticipating a rise in price. George W. Ludlow & Company was heade brother-in-law, George R. Keep, and it specimen's shoes. The first pair was turned ou plant on the northeast corner of Dundee as was still under construction. By August 1891 making about nine hundred pairs daily. The some three hundred different styles. Its offic mained in Chicago.

In October 1891, Grote convinced H. K. Cu sette to move their shirt factory from Chica factory to be constructed on the east side of l between Slade Avenue and Page Street. In rethree-story brick structure, Cutter and Cros to employ two hundred the first year and t ensuing four years. The shirtmakers started shop to train employees until their building pancy in June 1892. Investors in the impr
